The lifelong learning summer school at Corpus Christi College (founded in 1352) in Cambridge, United Kingdom enables participants to take academic courses for the love of learning, attend guest lectures and social gatherings, and engage in sight-seeing opportunities. Accommodations and meals are provided at the College. In this free information session, Nicholas Godfrey will discuss travel opportunities to the College for the summers of 2016 or 2017; the programs will be identical during both summers, only the dates will change. The residential summer school, based at Corpus, will give lifelong learners the extraordinary opportunity to experience Cambridge student life in the context of a program specifically designed for adult learners from around the world. Participants can choose to attend the full two-week program, or opt to attend for just one week. Dr. Nick Godfrey completed his PhD on the Rwandan Genocide in 2008, at Pembroke College, Cambridge. Since then, as well as doing some teaching, he has been working at Pembroke College on all aspects of summer and semester programs aimed at giving undergraduate students from around the world the chance to study at Cambridge. He also manages the lifelong learning summer school at Corpus Christi College. He finds all this work much more uplifting than his doctoral research!
