Uncovering Systemic Oppression
As the Root Cause of Poverty
Luke Black, Facilitator
Friday, February 12, 2016
12:15 to 1:45 p.m.
Mercado, Bldg. C, Room 131
ASU Downtown Phoenix campus
502 East Monroe Street, Phoenix, AZ, 85004

Lecture: The struggle to end poverty extends beyond serving people in need. Systemic oppression, which is the root cause of poverty, must be tackled as well. In his workshop, facilitator Luke Black will challenge participants to critically reflect on issues of racism, income inequality, economic exploitation, and abandonment of the work force. He will show that addressing systemic oppression requires the adoption of pro-active practices designed to address de jure (legal) and de facto (in practice) oppression. A paradigm shift is needed in how we see poverty and how work to end it.

Instructor: Luke Black received his MS degree in justice studies from ASU’s School of Social Transformation in 2015. He also holds a MA in transformational leadership from Seattle University. Luke works as the Equal Voices Facilitator for the Arizona Community Action Association. He engages Arizona communities in ending poverty through social justice and hosts workshops, conducts advocacy trainings, and creates opportunities for dialogue.
